On that note, we decided to spend a short weekend at the Village Hotel Albert Court that is just minutes away from the bright lights of Little India and the culture-rich Straits Chinese enclave of Bugis Street.

Around the compound, we noticed the traditional Indian and Peranakan carvings and motifs on the walls. Adding to the balance between old and new, the hotel has a central courtyard that offers a quiet respite from the bustling malls located just found ourselves within walking distance of both historical and modern attractions such as the Goddess of Mercy Temple and the Singapore Art Museum. If you're looking to live like a local, Village Hotel Albert Court will definitely put you right at the centre of

Though, the Village Hotel Albert Court did not earn its Certificate of Excellence 2017 solely for its good location. The hotel offers various services and facilities that rival the traditional chain hotels'. For our stay, we felt it was worth going for the Club room for its incredibly reasonable price and access to the lobby lounge. Besides serving delightful cocktails and other alcoholic and nonalcoholic beverages and light snacks, the Lobby Lounge is an ideal place for people watching. From its vantage point, we spent a leisurely afternoon watching life passed us by through the steady stream of guests checking in and out.

Before we ventured off to experience the local way of life in Singapore, we took a dip in the four-seater jacuzzi pool that is accessible to all guests of the hotel. It was certainly a relaxing experience that would be especially appreciated by business travellers. The facilities offered also include a gymnasium that is equipped with the latest treadmills. weights and cycles. There is even a caf within the hotel that serves a generous breakfast spread. Dining within the refurbished colonial building is certainly an experience that should not be missed.

Overall, we felt that Village Hotel Albert Court is the hotel you should stay in to get that holistic Singaporean experience. It is reasonably priced without compromising on the facilities and quality of service.
